

Intern Problems and how to solve them

Hey,

I'm currently in the middle of a 3-month internship and I've been running into some problems among colleagues. These problems have gotten out of hand in the last few weeks and I've wanted to tell the world for a while. So here I'm telling you about my problems which affect the working atmosphere.

For context, I'm working in a software company right now, with many colleagues not speaking my mother language German. Some also don't have the best English when it comes to talking, which makes it really frustrating to work on a project as a team.

There are also other problems, like distributing the work load in the team. I mostly get boring or repetitive tasks that no one wants to do, like going through various spreadsheets to search for flaws or some numbers we need for our project.

I also feel kind of left out, because they often go out to eat or drink something together after work and have never invited me to come along. My colleagues usually talk about what they did together so I can't really join in.

If I could create a nice working atmosphere for interns in a team of engineers, I would hire if not already more than one intern and put them together. They then should get a task that is not just boring labour, but involves a bit of thinking. Of course it depends on the type of company where you do the internship.

Thanks for reading my post and I hope I have helped some interns.
